

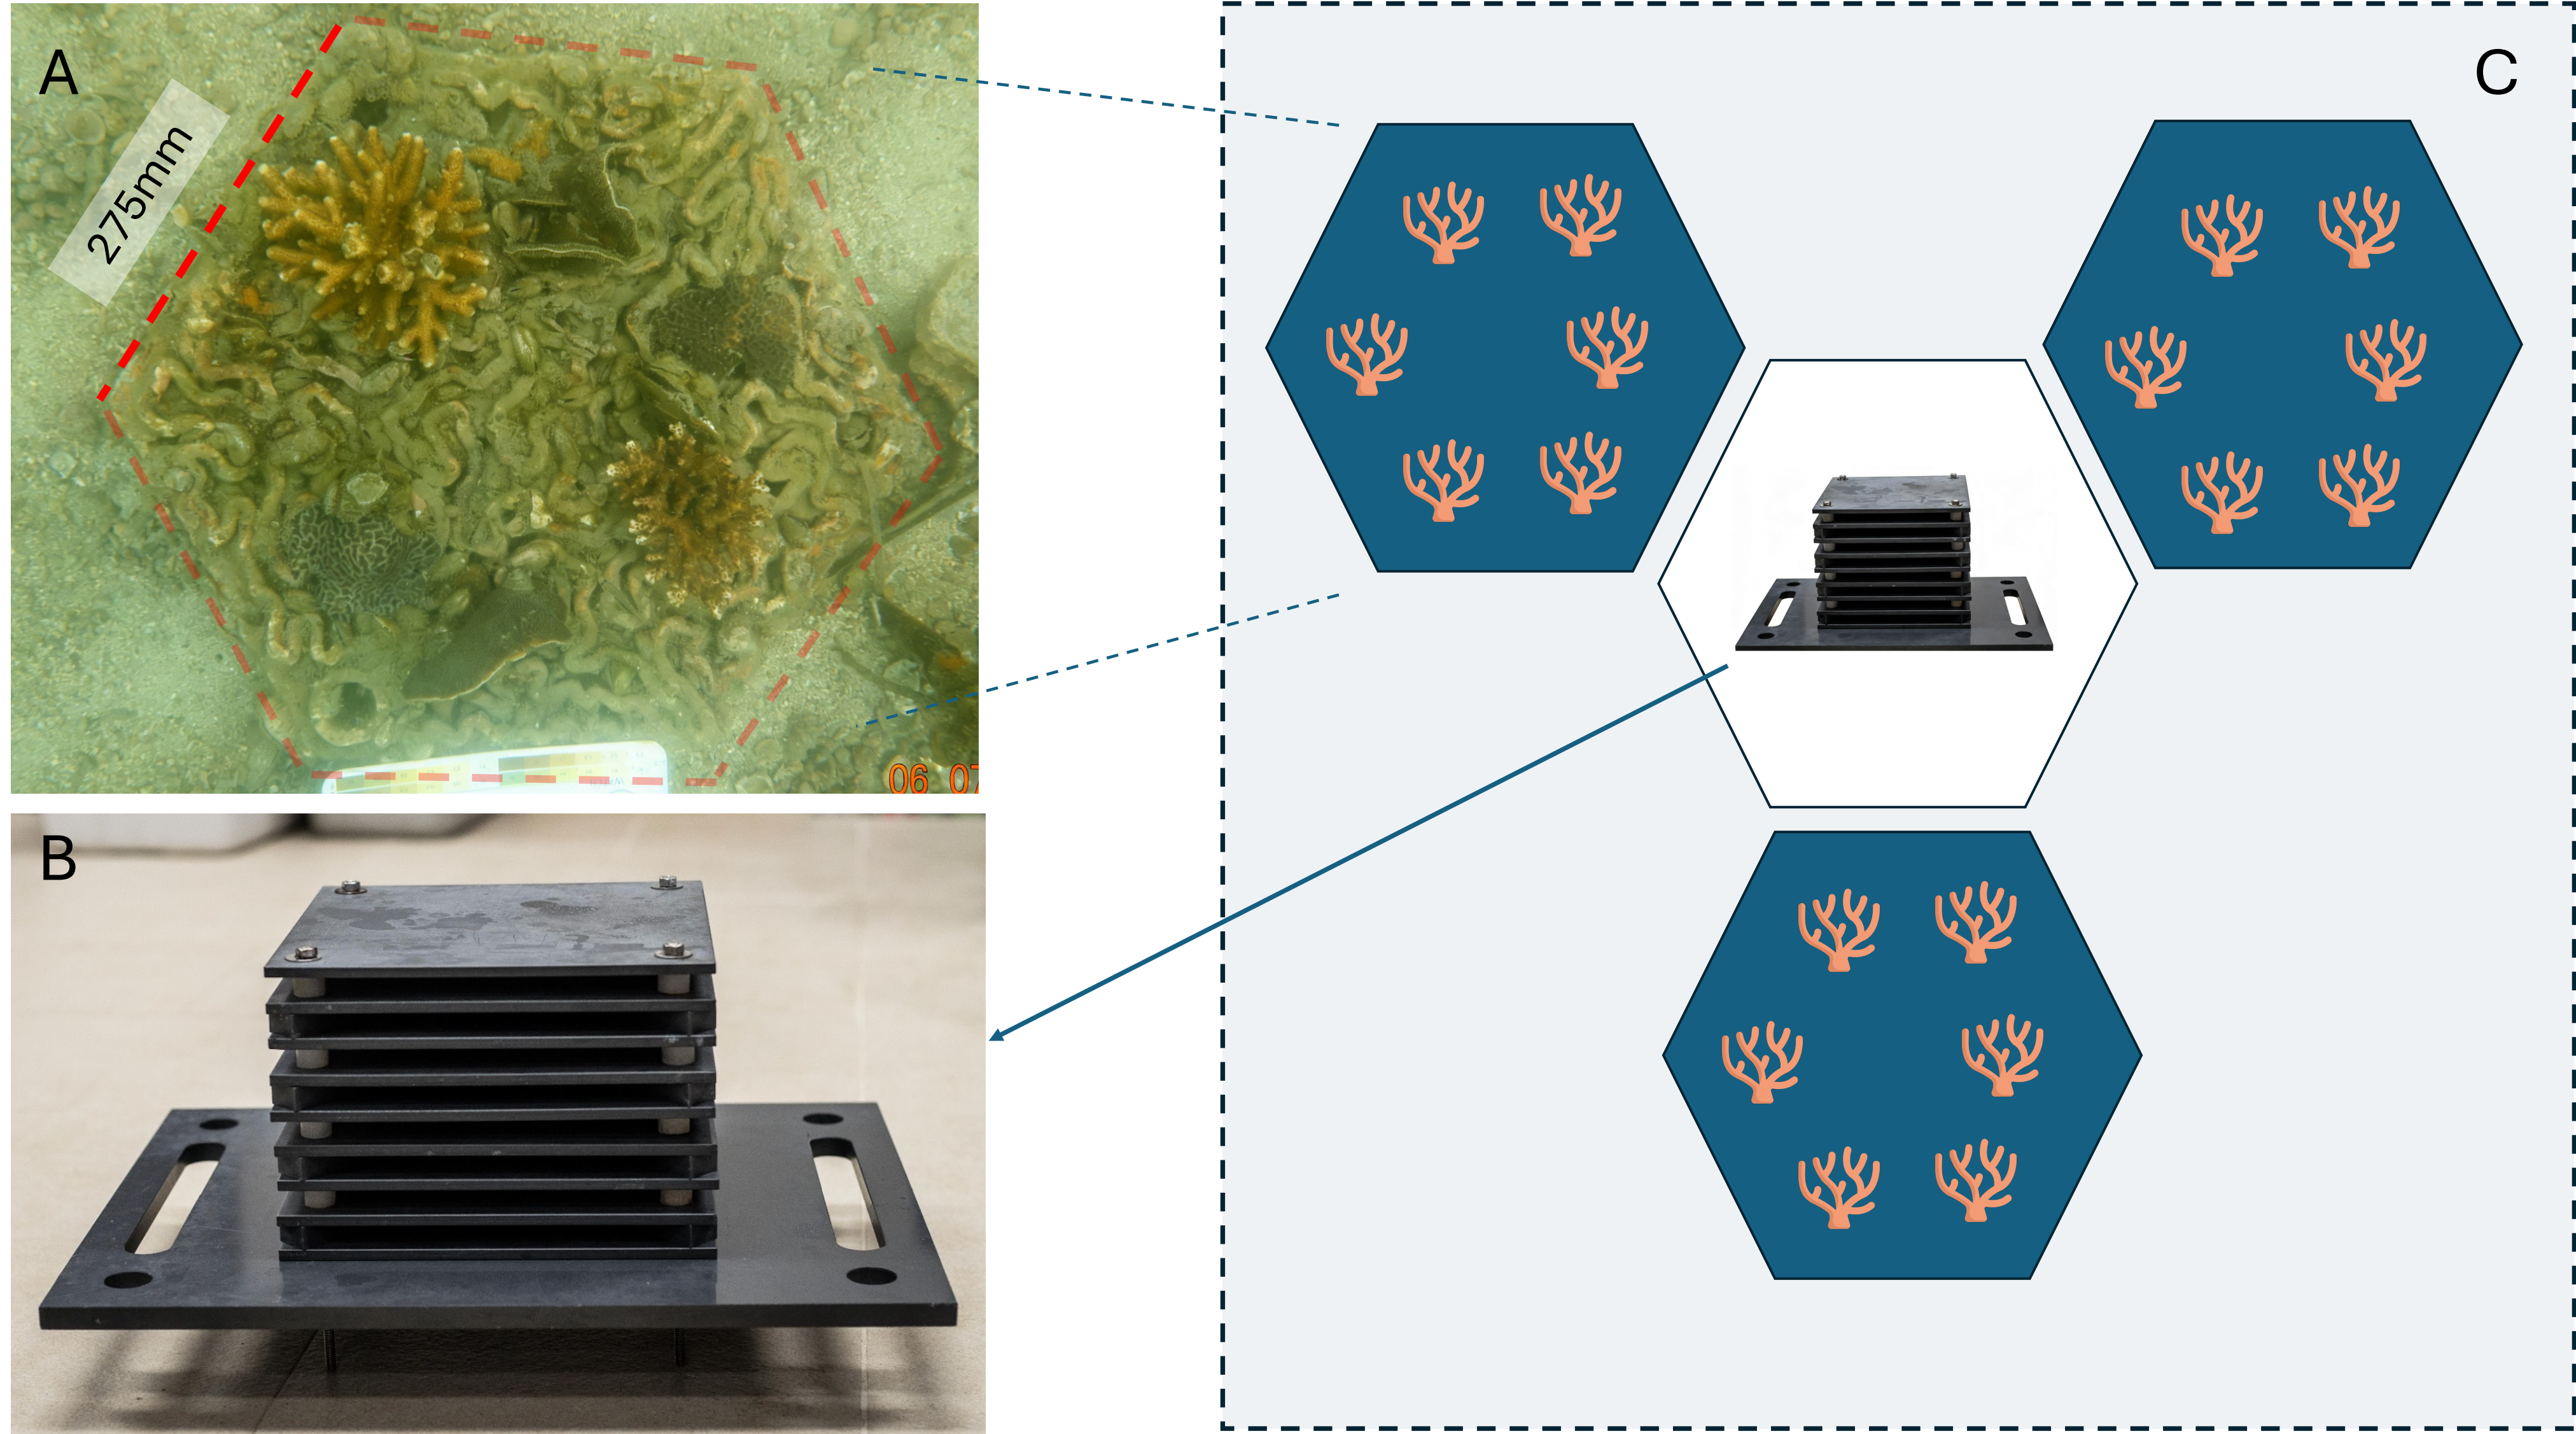

Figure 1: Experimental setup. (A) 3D printed hexagonal terracotta tile (275 mm per side, $\sim 0.2 \text{ m}^2$) used as the coral planting substrate. (B) Autonomous Reef Monitoring Structure (ARMS), the standardized biodiversity sampler. (C) Complete restoration unit, consisting of four hexagonal tiles: one deployed in the center supporting an ARMS, and one at each of the three corners hosting six coral fragments.